Forecast For Scotland
Issued by Met Office Aberdeen
at 0400 on Monday 20 Sep 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Mainly dry, sunny spells. A little rain developing, mostly Northwest.

Today:
Many parts will have a dry, bright day with sunny spells. Cloudy skies coming into the Northwest this morning bringing patchy light rain. Thicker cloud and a few light showers will edge further eastwards this afternoon with rain crossing Shetland.

Tonight:
It will be a dry night with clear periods. A few patches of mist and fog patches forming later tonight in places sheltered from the westerly breeze.

Tuesday:
Much of Scotland will have another dry, bright day with plenty of sunshine. Northwest Scotland and Northern Isles will become cloudy with a little rain later and southwesterly gales developing.

Outlook for Wednesday to Friday:
We will see a change to something more typically autumnal. Showers or longer spells of rain, especially in north with gales. Still some drier, brighter spells in south and east.
